

A Very Beautiful ASD Case Study T. Ray OMD

Patient is a 7 year old boy with Asberger's.

His family is involved in the Chiropractic community professionally so he has been treated with Orthomolecular Nutrition and Chiropractic by the best in the US. No results.

He presents with fear of new spaces and people, stimming, and is brilliant on the trumpet. It took some time for his mother to get him to allow me to examine and test him. I was able to find the required remedies. During the exam the mother asked to also go thru detox so I tested her and found a severe Heart meridian disturbance.

I asked her what she did for fun. She said she used to be an artist (painter) but hadn't done this since the boy became ill. She was miserable, grey skin tone, sunken eyes, a feeling of despair came from her. Understandably. I told her I would only put her thru a detox if she would promise to paint for at least 15 minutes a day. She agreed. They both left with their remedies and instructions.

After a few follow up visits, maybe 3 weeks later... the boy walked into the clinic without fear, jumped onto my lap and asked to be tested. A week after that the mother told me he had been accepted into a normal school and all symptoms of the ASD were gone. She was dumbfounded. So was I. This was the fastest ASD recovery I had ever seen, just a few weeks.

Kids get better and sicker much faster than adults, so his rapid improvement was at least somewhat understandable from that point of view. But the real reason didn't hit me until much later. The experience of Asberger's can be likened to being a prisoner in a cave, the severity of which portrayed by the visibility of the opening to the cave... If all a kid sees when they try to look out of their world, is a miserable depressed mother caregiver... who would want to come out of the cave? His mom totally changed with detox + painting, she was a different person: happy, playful. I think he was able to see her happiness and then wanted to come out. It was beautiful. He still needed to do his detox (vaccinations at the time contained mercury and aluminum, thimerosal) and so did she... but the beneficial synergy of her finding her joy again was undeniable.

Remedies for the boy: AP, Liverlife, Phase 4. Some ASD patients have to start with Phase 4 because of assimilation or 'low battery focus' issues. At that time I did not have Phase 1 for preparation or Catalyst for assimilation and Zeta potential restoration, but I think the power of him seeing his mother doing better was the key to the speed of recovery in this case.
